In 2006, California’s laborforce had twice as many limited english proficient workers than the national average.

In 2007, the percent of the nation’s labor force that worked at least 27 weeks and lived below the poverty line: 5.1